Shall a High Court Judge Be Insured?

READ AND BE SATISFIED

In the United States Supreme Court yesterday, in the argument on the case of the Northwestern Life Insurance Company, of Milwaukee, against the heirs of the estate of James L. McCue, former mayor of Charlottesville, Va., involving the payment of 120,000 of life insurance, the question arose as to the eligibility of three of the justices to sit in the hearing. The Northwestern is a mutual company. The three justices hold policies in the company and share in its profits. Chief Justice White was about to pass on the Justice White was about to pass on the question, appreciating the embarrasment felt by the three justices, and mentioning that if they felt disqualified to sit in the case there would be but five judges to consider the matter, in the absence of Justice Day, when he was consulted by Justice McKenna. After a brief talk the Chief Justice announced that the matter had been adjusted and that the entire court would sit in the case.

In one case a few years ago the late Justice l'eckham refused to sit with the court in a case on the ground that he was a director in an insuranc ecompany that was a party to the litigation.

The case that is being argued involves a question most interesting to all insurance companies, namely, the liability of the insurance company on a policy on the life of one who is afterward legally put to death for crime. Former Mayor McCue was convicted of the murder of his wife and was hanged. The insurance policies were payable to his estate and bis children claimed the benefits as heirs, and went before the United States Court. The McCue heirs are claiming the full benefit of the stringrot laws of Wisconsin, under which the Northwestern was incorporated.
